TUCSON FILM AND MUSIC FESTIVAL SUPPORTS HOST CITY WITH "TUCSON: SR77" COMPETITION

Call for Entries Now Open for City-Inspired Filmmaking Challenge

Tucson, AZ -- (October 21, 2008) -- The 2008 Tucson Film & Music Festival (October 9-12) concluded its fourth annual event by unveiling a unique and exciting competition that will highlight the immense talent that exists in Tucson, both on screen and behind the camera. "Tucson: SR77" challenges Southwestern filmmakers to produce a short film that captures the creative heart and soul of Tucson. Submissions are free and the winning entries will be showcased at a "Best of the Fest" special screening or as part of the TFMF festival open in 2009.

"This competition provides the opportunity for indie filmmakers to promote their view of Tucson and show off their filmmaking chops," says Festival Director Michael Toubassi. "It's also a reminder that Tucson's film and music community thrives year-round and its influences can be felt around the world."

Details for the "Tucson: SR77" Competition:

How does Tucson inspire you? Submit a short that illuminates the best of Tucson's art and music scene for the chance to be showcased in a special screening hosted by the Tucson Film & Music Festival. "Tucson: SR77" submissions do not require music; however, film soundtracks must feature Tucson-based bands and artists.

The not-so-fine-print (the RULES):

Length: no longer than 5 minutes.

Submission Fee: Free!

Deadline: January 15, 2009
